Beyond the breaking point: patient survey highlights NHS challenges

July 2024

Introduction

"I have complex interacting physical/mental health problems that don't fit onto a single care pathway. No safety net for my healthcare. I feel abandoned by NHS and unsafe."

The Patients Association's survey into patients' experiences of healthcare, carried out just before July's general election, provides compelling evidence supporting Secretary of State for Health and Social Care, Wes Streeting's assessment that the NHS is broken.

Our findings reveal a healthcare system that is failing to meet patients' needs. The stark reality is clear: patients deserve far better than they currently get.

As the Secretary of State said: "It will be the mission of my department, every member of this government, and the 1.4 million people who work in the NHS, to turn our health service around".¹

Our report underscores the critical need for this mission and provides insights into the patient experiences that demonstrate why this transformation is so urgently required.
